

The FCC cannot have any useful effect on social problems by simple-minded attacks on television violence, whether there is too much or not. The acceptance and taste for violence has been bred into our social structure through glorification in sports, sensationalist news, video games, publicly available movies, and abdication of parental responsibility by far too many. Regulating violence on TV is the same as saying that any violence that passes the FCC screen is acceptable violence. What a wonderful message that would be.
